The Canadian Bureau for International Education (CBIE) was founded in the postwar years under the banner: Friendly Relations with Overseas Students (FROS) by a group of inspired students at the University of Toronto.

Today, CBIE manages and administers scholarships on behalf of Canadian government departments, private and public sector organizations and partner governments across the world.

Over the past 45 years, CBIE has advised international ministries at the policy and planning level, developed programs where school leaders and teachers are the focus of change, provided systematic, long-term support for modernization or reform agendas and built capacity of civil society organizations.
